

You brought me the map to look at, Freddy, and you showed me, “McDonalds, bus, coke, football (Adidas logo), shop (BP logo.)” We talked about what we noticed. I asked if you go on a train and you pointed saying, “That way and that way. On the road.”

We went onto to look at some other road maps, “America” and “A big house”. You then created a game with the map saying, “Find the monster” and went off round the nursery with the map in your hand. You brought me a container and told me that you had the monster, then said, “He’s gone!” and “Got you monster.”

It was lovely seeing you so interested in the maps, Freddy, and I loved the way you created a game with them. It was great hearing you use language in your game too.

I will continue to use maps with you to engage your interest, Freddy; perhaps next time you may try making one yourself.
